

Call for expressions of Interest

Two co-Editors sought:

One with expertise in International Development Practice

One with expertise in the Sociological and Anthropological perspective and analysis of International Development

The European Journal of Development Research (EJDR) redefines and modernises what international development is, recognising the many schools of thought on what human development constitutes. It encourages debate between competing approaches to understanding global development and international social development.

The journal is multidisciplinary and wide-ranging. It welcomes submissions that improve our conceptual understanding of international development processes, and those that propose policy and developmental tools by analysing empirical evidence, whether qualitative, quantitative, mixed methods or anecdotal. Submissions must be well-grounded in theory and must also indicate how their findings are relevant to development practitioners in the field and/or policy makers. The journal encourages papers which embody the highest quality standards, and which use an innovative approach.

The European Journal of Development Research is an ISI-rated journal and is part of the European Association of Development and Training Institutes (EADI).

EJDR seeks two co-Editors

The EJDR is seeking to recruit two new co-Editors to join its Editorial Team. We are looking for research-active scholars or practitioners with extensive experience of publishing, editing and reviewing for high-ranking academic journals. We encourage applicants from minorities and the Global South.

The co-Editors will join an active Editorial Team, amongst which management of the paper review process is shared to ensure that Editors manage papers within their area of expertise.

The co-Editor roles available are:

1. One co-Editor with research expertise on Development Practice including the planning, implementation and evaluation of development projects and programmes, political economy of aid and development, etc. For this role, we are particularly interested in applicants:
 - With an understanding of French West Africa and one or more of the following areas: food and agriculture; resource extraction; supply chains; economic development.
 - Bilingual English-French.
2. One co-Editor with research expertise related to Sociological and/or Anthropological Perspectives on International Development including gender and development, development and race, processes and implications of social and cultural change in the context of development, etc.

Application process

To be considered for this role, please email your curriculum vitae (including a list of any awards and publications) with a covering letter detailing why you are interested in the role, to: Natalia Lorenzoni, Managing Editor, European Journal of Development Research - n.lorenzoni@outlook.com

Closing date for receipt of expressions of interest: 31st July 2021. Shortlisted applicants will be advised in September 2021 and will be invited for a virtual discussion with members of the EJDR Editorial Team in September/ October 2021. Final appointments will be confirmed in Q4 2021.
